Jax-Miami Passenger Rail On Track

The push to bring back passenger service from Jacksonville to Miami via the Florida East Coast Railway line is gaining steam.

The requested $268 million to allow 90 mph Amtrak passengers on the line didn't get federal stimulus funding, but a lot of political hee-hawing could translate into funding through U.S. rail investment and improvement grants or another source entirely.

Gov. Charlie Crist took the line for a test run earlier this month. His display of interest no doubt coincides with the Obama Administration's heralding of high-speed rail. Click here for more on Crist's rail trip.

Now it appears St. Augustine has a proposed station location. The 2,500-square-foot facility at Carrera Street at U.S. 1 would be designed to fit comfortably with the area's historic charm. MetroJacksonville has more and sketches of the proposed station.

Click here for my past story on what the passenger railroad would be mean for Florida's economy.
